SCHOOL BOARD

(Also called: School district, School division, School council, District education council, Divisional education council)

School boards make decisions for the group of schools within their area. (For example: they implement the curriculum, make hiring and firing decisions, and decide when and how money should be spent on schools.)

The head of a school board is called the superintendent, and the members are called trustees or members.

PROVINCIAL/TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENT

For a complete list of the school boards in each province and territory check out our Further Resources on page XXX.

In some remote areas, there are no school boards, and schools are operated directly by the government.

Private schools may or may not have school boards. If you go to a private school, you might want to look on your school's website, or ask someone at your school, whether there is a school board.
